FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

HONDURANS TO IMMIGRATE TO NORTH CAROLINA

April 9, 2012 - Raleigh, NC – In collaboration with local law enforcement and other state agencies, the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement Office has drafted a plan to begin allowing hundreds of Hondurans to immigrate to North Carolina. Honduras is a republic in Central America with an estimated population of almost eight million people.

A report from the non-partisan Center for Immigration Studies (CIS) noted that these Honduran immigrants will require a wide range of tax-payer funded state services to help them begin their new lives in North Carolina. The report also indicated that the influx of Hondurans may increase competition for jobs in various sectors of the economy. Finally, the CIS report stated that these immigrants have limited English-language ability and exposure to American culture, so it is very likely they will take some time to fully assimilate into the U.S.

Nearly two-thirds of the Honduran population live below the poverty line and have limited access to clean drinking water, food, and employment. The Honduran government is also known for brutally repressing its citizens, whose rights are routinely violated by excessive use of police force that often ends in fatalities. In short, the CIS report suggests that poverty and government repression threaten the lives of many Hondurans simply trying to survive.
